Sylvie is anything but a normal person. Although she doesn't know it, she has the power to change reality as she pleases, although this only manifests unconsciously and after a casual bleeding eye. These are small changes that have unexpected consequences. All action is linked to a reaction.

“Plasmapheresis” is a story of decisions, personal discovery and the importance of friendship and respect for the freedom of others in the face of such primary concepts as survival or common well-being.

If we had the power to change everything, would we? How long before we screwed up again?

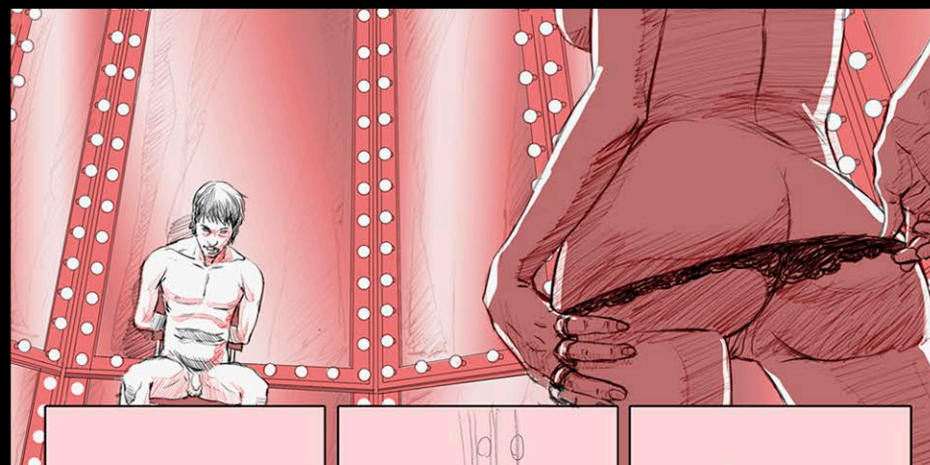

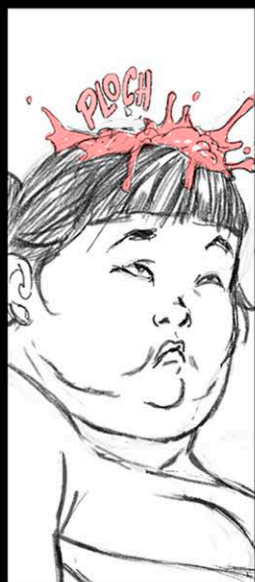

And most importantly, what would you do in the last days of your life knowing that you can do anything but heal?
